

Walking among the geysers and mudpots in the caldera of the extinct volcano that is Yellowstone was our trip experience of the year. We saw elk, a big herd at Willow Flats in Grand Teton NP. Henry enjoyed scaring us half to death by climbing out on the rocks in the middle of a Snake River tributary. Fun! Life-threatening, but fun!

Andy headed off to the South Pole at the end of October. The planes can't make it out to the distant equipment sheds in bad weather so this week he has been stuck at South Pole station waiting for a ride.

Go to geocaching.com to read about Connie's hobby and the craze that's sweeping the planet. Find treasure, Andy lives for a week in each of 5 red huts while repairing wind turbines that run magnetic field monitoring equipment.

explore forgotten historic sites like old mines and abandoned fish ladders - perfect for the whole family. Morris is finishing high school and will head off to college in the fall. I bought him a coffee maker. Frank moved into a new office in the just-completed new chemistry building at Princeton and of course none of the networking stuff worked. Fixed now. And I spent summer 32 at the Silver Bay Y working at all things outdoors.

Faucet is fixed!

Ted and Morris

Happy holidays and good wishes for 2011!