

Dec. 2012 Lost power for 8 days after Sandy but had Internet, TV, cell and a generator so it wasn't too bad. Frank takes time away from Princeton to work on conservation projects - he and Andy built and installed a bridge at a nature preserve. Right now Andy is 10,000 feet high near the South Pole digging equipment out of the snow and fighting to get it to work in minus ohmygod degrees F.

When people from California visit NJ we spend a lot of time outdoors. Henry is happiest when he can climb something really high and really dangerous.

Morris spent last year in Israel before heading off to MIT this September. As usual I spent the summer, my 34th, at the Silver Bay YMCA in NY on Lake George. Even that clean lake has problems of increasing pollution from upwind coal plants and invasive aquatic species like the Asian clam. I give a little program about preserving the lake and hope people take it to heart. Connie wears out bikes in the California hills and recently sent me some jasper she found. Ted wears out math puzzles and keeps the world up to date on Facebook.

Happy holidays and good wishes for 2013!
