

Hi Folks

Dec. 2009

There really is a pole at the South Pole. Andy was hired by the National Science Foundation to repair equipment at 4 satellite monitoring stations. He arrived at the South Pole before Thanksgiving and plans to be home by New Year's. He phones home on the Iridium phone system - the voice quality is about as bad as that of every other cell phone.

As for the rest of us, we volunteer for environmental groups, Frank commutes to Princeton a few times a week, Connie works at Symantec and recently found herself in India, Singapore and Ireland for meetings. Ted teaches, writes educational software and maintains a very interesting Facebook page. Henry (10) likes comic books and Morris (almost 17) is studying Japanese - he won an award recently. I spent my 31st summer at the Silver Bay Y, driving their 9 passenger tour boat and photographing wildflowers. An all-time high of 8 people attended my flower slide show.

*Happy holidays
and good wishes for 2010!*
